The LipoSuction stops discharging when your battery reaches storage voltage and then goes into an ultra-low leakage current so the unit can be left on years at a time without over-discharging the packs. Features: Support 3S, 4S, 5S, 6S LiPos; 500mw discharge power. Brings a 1300mah lipo to storage voltage within 24 hours

Lipo Storage goes to 3.8-3.85V/cell. Lipo discharge goes to 3.0V/cell. It does not go to 0V as that would kill the battery. Discharge means remove ~100% of the capacity which is about 3V/cell. The discharge rate for both modes should be the same max as heat dissipation of the discharge current is what limits discharge rate.

I have several military style ammo cans. They are in new condition, and air tight. I plan on storing my 2-3-4S lipo"s in them. Seems like a safe way to store them, if one was to spontaneously combust, there"s no oxygen to keep the fire going, and virtually no way it would burn through the can.
